

i vicariously taste sour grapes

there's a reason why
love poems
are the most common.

my heart drips
up
toward the back of my throat, clinging.

a grassy field ablaze
with smells of agony,
of thyme,
of a world
burned inside out, twisted,
and tied back together,

ahhhhh ,
what am i supposed to do ¿¿

it at you.
eats

*i dream of a time
where geometry doesn't write the rhyme i don't want to fight this phantom flame anymore but, the choice
is elsewhere
¿?*

life is
a half-tunnel,
one side,
a sky bleeding aimlessly
the other,
a concrete mirror

*it is what you make it drowning trees roll by,
distant in their closeness*

*pain gushing
gushing
slamming my head against the concrete*

and it feels good