

wobble

the sun wobbles.

even that which is the origin is affected by its own effects.

?thus, where lies the true power;

perhaps not in the origin itself, but in the relationship that ties the origin to its effects.

maybe the divine is a relationship rather than an entity.

instead of seeking a connection with the divine,

we should see the connection which is divine.

perhaps “the origin” is a void.

something inherently incomprehensible, forever unfathomable.

and we should attempt to understand our relationship with it, rather than it in itself.

though the sun is the origin of our solar system’s gravity, it is the gravity itself which holds things together.

the gravity is what connects. what affects. what flows.

and it can only be understood as a relationship.

though we are affected by the source, the source is affected by us, and thus it is the relationship that is the ultimate underlying.

it is the relationship that is truly fundamental.

it is the relationship that is—in some sense,—the essential human pursuit.